Friends,

This Tuesday, the United States Senate voted, 57-40, in favor of Senator Rand Paul's Congressional Review Act resolution to overturn the CDC's federal mask mandate for planes, trains, buses, and other public transportation hubs. This legislation in the Senate mirrors a House bill that I am currently leading with Rep. Brian Mast (FL-18).

"The CDC's mask mandate for public transportation was never based on science, and it's time for the CDC to stop pretending otherwise," I told The Daily Caller when I introduced this commonsense legislation.

Like the horrific policies that continue to force child masking in schools, the public transportation mask mandate was never based on science. And importantly, Congress never voted to establish these programs.

Coincidentally, this week also marks the two-year anniversary of "15 Days to Slow the Spread." For two years, unelected bureaucrats, like Dr. Fauci, have run roughshod over the Constitution, dictating to the American people what freedoms they may exercise.

Every American should be able to travel without needing a mask. Every student in America should be able to attend school without being forced to mask up against their will. It's critical that the House pass our legislation to finally put an end to this chapter of unscientific mandates.

Right now, members of the House are joining my resolution to end this mandate once and for all. Americans are simply tired of being harassed while they travel, and my colleagues and I will continue to fight to restore their freedoms.
