Thibs: Robinson in 'good spirits' after surgery

By PETER BOTTE

ATLANTA — Tom Thibodeau said Mitchell Robinson was in "good spirits" after he had surgery Thursday to repair a fractured right thumb.

"He's been through it before so I think he understands what he has to do. He'll help any way he can, so he'll be engaged with the team and stuff," Thibodeau said before the Knicks' 139-124 loss to the Hawks. "It's unfortunate, but it's part of the game. Next guy get in there, get the job done. Obviously, you don't replace a guy like Mitch individually. You have to do it collectively. Everyone's got to pitch in, get it done."

Robinson also missed chunks of time during the 2020-21 season with a broken hand and season-ending foot injury.

Thibodeau added that he's unsure how long Robinson will be sidelined beyond being reevaluated in three weeks, as the Knicks indicated. He reiterated he is comfortable with Isaiah Hartenstein and Jericho Sims sharing time at center in Robinson's absence, and that he also can employ a smaller lineup at times with Julius Randle at center.

Thibodeau has been impressed with Sims' work ethic and ability to fill in at multiple positions during previous injury absences for Robinson and Obi Toppin.

"That's what we loved about him from his rookie year, like, as soon as got drafted, he's been a great guy to be around, great teammate, great worker," Thibodeau said of the team's 2021 second-round pick. "I think you can see all the areas that he's improved upon. And I know the people that were working him out [before the draft], and we felt like there was a big upside to him."

Sims started in place of Robinson, finishing with 12 points and eight rebounds in 28 minutes.

Toppin, a Brooklyn native, is backing the Giants in their playoff game Saturday against the Eagles, Jalen Brunson's favorite team.

"I ain't gonna lie. I am a fake Giants fan. That's just because I want Jalen to lose," Toppin said. "I still love the Giants, though. I'm from New York. I've got to love the Giants. I love them more than the Jets."

Ex-Yankee to manage Triple-A SWB squad

Associated Press

MOOSIC, Pa. — Former Yankee Shelley Duncan was hired Friday to manage the franchise's top farm team, the Triple-A Scranton/Wilkes-Barre RailRiders.

Duncan won the International League MVP award with Scranton in 2009.

The 43-year-old Duncan was drafted by the Yankees in 2001 and hit .231 with 43 homers and 144 RBIs in the majors for the Yankees

(2007-09), Cleveland (2010-12) and Tampa Bay.

He is replacing Doug Davis, Scranton's manager for the past three seasons.

Duncan managed Arizona's short-season Class A Hillsboro affiliate in 2015 and 2017, High A Visalia in 2016 and Double-A Jackson in 2019.

He became Toronto's major league field coordinator in 2019 and spent the past two seasons as analytics coordinator with the White Sox.
