

Communicating with your health care team

Physicians and other medical professionals are a central part of the care team of a person living with dementia. Along with other members — which may include family, friends or others — they work to provide support throughout the course of the disease. Effective communication with other care team members — particularly health care providers — is critical to ensure that the person living with dementia receives the best possible care.

Advice for the person living with dementia

Prepare for visits.

The following tips can be helpful as you prepare for a visit with a health care professional:

- Document any changes in your health, including your mood, memory and behaviors.
- Bring a list of your current prescriptions and over-the-counter medications (including any vitamins or supplements).
- Consider bringing your care partner, family member or friend with you.
- Make a list of questions you and/or your care partner wants to ask.

Ask questions.

It's normal to have many questions about the disease and your personal circumstances and common to forget what you'd like to ask a doctor. Consider bringing a list of questions to each appointment so you're prepared to discuss your questions and concerns. Also, be sure to let the physician or other medical professionals know if you need additional information or clarification.

The Alzheimer's Association National Early-Stage Advisory Group — comprising individuals from across the country living with early-stage Alzheimer's or other dementias — helped develop a list of questions to help others make the most of doctor visits. These questions may be helpful as you create your own list to share with the doctor.

- What is my official diagnosis?
- Which test(s) or tools were used to determine my diagnosis?
- What were you measuring with the tests performed?
- Can my symptoms be attributed to any other causes?

- Are there any daily practices that may help me continue to live well with the disease?
- Is there support available to help me sustain these daily practices?

Treatments and coverage

- Which treatments are options for me?
- Will this medication target symptoms of the disease or the disease itself?
- How will the effectiveness of each treatment be measured?
- Are there any possible side effects? How will they be monitored and managed?
- Is one treatment option more likely than another to interfere with medications for other conditions?
- Will this treatment be covered by my insurance? If not, what are my options?

Clinical studies

- Am I eligible to enroll in any clinical studies?
- Is published information about clinical treatment studies available?
- What are the possible risks and benefits for participation in a clinical study based on my medical history?
- What are the eligibility requirements for these clinical studies?

Health care team

Advice for members of your care team

In the early stage

In the early stage of Alzheimer's, the person living with the disease should be included in all conversations regarding care and encouraged to independently share any health-related observations with the physician and other members of the medical team. If the person appears to need help communicating his or her needs, you may want to ask permission before interjecting.

This is a good time to ask the person living with dementia to sign a release of information so that you can freely communicate with the doctor on the person's behalf when the disease becomes more advanced.

As the disease advances

Over time, as the person's needs change and ability to communicate declines, the care team should consider which adjustments to make in order to ensure good health care. The team will also need to provide any updates on behalf of the person with dementia in order to maintain accurate health records that are accessible in case of an emergency.

Insurance coverage of care planning

Medicare and some other forms of health insurance cover care planning services for people recently diagnosed with cognitive impairment, including Alzheimer's and other dementias. Care planning allows individuals and their caregivers to learn about medical and non-medical treatments, clinical trials and services available in the community, and additional information and support that can contribute to a higher quality of life.

Under this coverage, physicians, physician assistants, nurse practitioners, clinical nurse specialists and certified nurse midwives can provide detailed care planning that includes:

- Evaluating cognition and function.
- Measuring neuropsychiatric symptoms.
- Medication reconciliation.
- Evaluating safety (including driving ability).
- Identifying caregivers and caregiver needs.
- Identifying and assessing care directives.
- Planning for palliative care needs.
- Referrals to community services for both the beneficiary and their caregiver.

Experts note that care planning for individuals living with dementia is an ongoing process and that a formal update to a care plan should occur at least once per year.

Talk to your health care provider about care planning services. If your provider is not familiar with Medicare coverage of care planning, your provider can visit alz.org/careplanning for more information.
